BASEBALL FOR COLLEGES HARD TO GET STARTED

Baseball as a college game did not really begin until the sixties, and even then had little general popularity. In an endeavor to get something of the spirit of the times, I asked a man who was graduated in the early days of baseball in the colleges whether they played baseball in his time. "No," he said at first; "or, at least," he corrected himself, "a few chaps used to go over into a vacant lot that we passed on our walks and make fools of themselves knocking the ball about, but the college never took any interest in it."

In the autumn of 1865, the University Baseball Club was organized. Yale, and a nine picked from the class nine accepted a challenge from the Agassian Club of Wesleyan. A contemporary account stated: "The Yale nine, never before having played together, improved vastly as the game progressed, and toward the close played very brilliantly. Yale won 9 to 13, the game lasting three hours and twenty minutes."

Late in '68, Columbia and Yale had a game, and in the following year Yale, having been spurred on by her successes, accepted a challenge from the Agassian Club of Wesleyan. A contemporary account stated: "The Yale nine, never before having played together, improved vastly as the game progressed, and toward the close played very brilliantly. Yale won 9 to 13, the game lasting three hours and twenty minutes."

The score card of the game between the classes of 1869 of Yale and Harvard, reproduced from the original score book, furnished in itself enough data to show that by the end of the 60s the game had taken on the really permanent form which, with minor alterations, has been preserved to the present day.

The first Yale-Princeton game was played on June 21, 1865, Yale winning 30 to 13, and the first Harvard game was played July 25 of that year, Harvard winning, 25 to 11. The following year Yale again played the champions of the country, this time the Mutuals of New York, and was once more beaten, by the close score of 18 to 16.

In the autumn of 1871, the record shows that "the Yale pitcher, Strong, showed signs of great promise," although in the game with the Haymakers of Troy he was badly for 46 bases, Harvard was almost uniformly successful against Yale for the first few years, but in 1874, in the games played in connection with the college boating regatta at Saratoga, Yale, through the brilliant pitching of Avery, turned the tables and won both games. The most remarkable game played between these two nines, however, was in the spring of 1877, when Carter, the Yale pitcher, made the extraordinary record of allowing only 27 Harvard men at the bat, Morrisania, the champions of the country. The game was exciting, and was hugely enjoyed by the crowd. At the end of the fifth inning Yale had made 8 runs and the Union 4. But the Union improved, and had tied the score by the end of the ninth, and finally succeeded in winning by the score of 16 to 14.

STEEPLECHASE IS FEATURE EVENT ON JAMESTOWN TRACK

Heavily Played Favorite, Dr. Pillow Wins.
Race for Members of Norfolk Hunt Club.
Perfect Weather Prevails.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Norfolk, Va., April 9.—The feature of the racing here this afternoon was a steeplechase, which was won by the heavily played favorite, Dr. Pillow, cleverly ridden by Ryan. Only five timber loppers went to the post, and instead of going to the front, as he did in his previous start, Dr. Pillow was held back, and Lucille R. was allowed to make the running to the last turn. Ryan here gave Dr. Pillow his head and the gelding shot to the front, and only galloped the rest of the journey, winning, pulled up to a walk, by three lengths. Dr. Heard was second, fifteen lengths in front of Lucille R. Woodside fell at the second jump and Miss Fletcher at the last obstacle. Perfect summer weather prevailed to-day, but the crowd was not quite as large as that of yesterday. Quite an importance on the card was a race for the members of the Norfolk Hunt Club. The race was for a mile and a quarter, but the riders appealed to the stewards to reduce the distance, saying their horses were not in condition to go the long route. Albert Simons took another bunch of corn out of the ring when Otto beat the odds-on favorite, Ragman, by a scant

DONOVAN TELLS BEGINNERS TO CUT OUT THE CURVE BALL

Famous Detroit Heaver Says a Pitcher Can Get by on Brains, Control and a Speedy Jumper. Experience Proves It.

"Cut out the curve balls," is the advice given by Bill Donovan, the oldest pitcher in point of service on the Detroit team, to the young pitchers on the team.

"Why do you persist in harping on that subject?" was asked.

"I am doing it for the best interests of the young pitchers," replied Donovan. "Now, look here, I have gone through the game long enough to know what is good and bad for a pitcher."

Donovan then went on to explain that excess pitching a curve ball nearly drove him out of baseball.

"When I was with Brooklyn I rarely ever threw a curve," continued Donovan. "Duke Farrell was the catcher, and we worked together so well that he resorted to no signals. I had the speed and whiffed them over the plate. Of course control helped me out. But my fast ball had an upshoot to it and I was getting away with three and four-hit games in grand style."

"It was in 1903 that I joined the Detroit club. Jim McGuire was the catcher. Jim thought that a curve ball was the hardest thing in the world to hit. At least, he gave me that impression by his signals. He would start nearly every inning with the signal for a curve ball. Soon the strain began to tell on me. My shoulder pained me intensely.

"Still, I kept plugging away, thinking it was a cold, not dreaming that the curve ball was making a wreck of my arm. When McGuire left Detroit it dawned on me that the curve ball was the trick that undid me."

"For several seasons I had trouble with it, and I laid it all to excessive use of the curve ball. When Manager Jennings took hold in the spring of 1907, he advised me to give my arm a rest after I explained everything to him."

"Bill," he said to me, "let your arm rest and then come back with that speer." I did and the good it did me everybody knows. I had the best year in my career.

"That is why I advise the young pitchers to get away from curve throwing. It will eventually wreck their arms, as it did mine. You know these young chaps, just trying to break in to the league, think that they have got to curve a ball in order to show the manager that they have something. There is where they're foolish. Stick to the fast ball, and it will bring home the bacon nine times out of ten."

SPORTS BET FIGHT IS SHORT AFFAIR

New York, April 9.—The Jeffries-Johnson fight July 4, is scheduled as a forty-five-round contest, but no one believes it can last so long. The betting favors a fight from ten to twenty rounds as outside propositions, with from twelve to fifteen rounds more likely.

Suppose, for the sake of argument, we say that the fight goes twelve rounds. That's thirty-six minutes of actual fighting with eleven minutes rest, forty-seven minutes in all.

Leaving out of consideration the value of the moving pictures for a moment, and confining speculation to the purse, it is hard to locate any more valuable minutes anywhere in history.

Should the fight go to the end of twelve rounds before a knock-out ends it, the winner will get for his share, $1,611.5 a minute after the ringing of the gong. He would receive $2,104.3 for every minute of actual fighting.

The loser will get $573.3 for his share for every minute after the gong rings, or a trifle over $70 a minute for every minute of actual fighting.

Now as to the picture end.

There is a possibility, if the fight is fast and interesting, and goes long enough that the picture receipts will be worth anywhere from $500,000 up to each of the fighters.

Suppose the pictures do bring each man $500,000. This will mean that for thirty-six minutes actual fighting the winner will eventually accumulate not minute the nice little sum of $15,593 and the loser will grab off about $14,583 per minute.

Of course, the fight may go twelve rounds, and on the other hand either man might win within a round, or it might possibly go fifty-five rounds. This latter is by no means probable. Jeffries has declared he will win with a punch, if he can do so. In this event, the victory might increase his fortune at the rate of about $250,000 a minute, giving him a minute to cool his heels, Johnson, another minute to land the punch.

Naturally no one can give any rational opinion on the distance this fight will go. While both men have declared they will not fight for the picture machine, it may be hard for them to forget that money is being ground out minute by minute by the operators, and they may go along under a pull for a few rounds.

Then, again, one may shake up the other with a jolt and uncork a knock-out punch when it is least to be expected. If any one tried to figure out the possibilities of this battle he'd be as much of a bug as the man who studies the dope sheet of baseball.
